Chirurgia (Bucur). 2012;107(5):670-674

Splenic Sarcoidosis – a Case Report

R. Palade[1], D. Voiculescu[1], E. Suliman[1], G. Simion[2]
[1]Ist Department of General Surgery, University Emergency Hospital Bucharest, Romania
[2]Department of Pathology, University Emergency Hospital Bucharest, Romania

Abstract
Patient aged 66 years, was admitted for splenomegaly grade III/IV, haematological hypersplenism and medium / large secondary anemia, diagnosed in the hematology clinic, where a yeloproliferative syndrome was denied. Was performed splenectomy, splenic lodge toilet and drainage. Histopathology was established the diagnosis of splenic sarcoidosis. Good postoperative evolution. Main issues discussed are etiopathogeny, diagnostic and therapeutic, that this rare disease of unknown etiology is giving.
Key words: sarcoidosis, haematological hypersplenism, splenectomy

Corresponding author: Daniel Voiculescu, M.D.
Ist Department of General Surgery, University Emergency Hospital Bucharest
Romania
E-mail: danvoiculescu@gmail.com